

Making it in the Media:

*Prototyping and Materialization Processes
Among Local Media Houses and Bloggers in Denmark*

Maria Eitzinger
PhD Dissertation

DEPARTMENT OF ANTHROPOLOGY
FACULTY OF SOCIAL SCIENCES
UNIVERSITY OF COPENHAGEN
PHD DISSERTATION 2019 · ISBN 978-87-7209-297-3

MARIA EITZINGER

Making it in the Media:

Prototyping and Materialization Processes

Among Local Media Houses and Bloggers in Denmark

---

Making it in the Media:

Prototyping and Materialization Processes

Among Local Media Houses and Bloggers in Denmark

PhD Dissertation 2019 © Maria Eitzinger
ISBN 978-87-7209-297-3 (Printed book)
ISBN 978-87-7209-304-8 (E-book)
Printed by SL grafik, Frederiksberg, Denmark (slgrafik.dk)

Making it in the Media:

Prototyping and Materialization Processes

Among Local Media Houses and Bloggers in Denmark

Maria Eitzinger

PhD Dissertation

Department of Anthropology

Faculty of Social Sciences

University of Copenhagen

&

Danish School of Media and Journalism

Research and Knowledge Department

Supervisors

Hanne Overgaard Mogensen

University of Copenhagen

Trine Nielsen

Danish School of Media and Journalism

Submitted

August 2019

Table of Contents

Acknowledgments	1
Chapter I: Introduction	3
Analytical Frame	9
Media and Anthropology	10
Digital Media, Design and Anthropology	13
Anthropology and Materiality	15
Contributions	17
Empirical Contribution	17
Methodological Contribution	18
Theoretical Contribution	19
Applied Contribution	19
Structure of Dissertation	20
Chapter II: The Changing Media Landscape	23
Media Development	24
Media Landscape and Convergence	26
Media Market: From Legacy Media to New Media	27
Media Houses in Denmark	31
Regional Media House	34
Bloggers	36
Danish Bloggers and Their Influence	40
Chapter III: Fieldwork and Methodological Reflections	45
Positionality	47
Fieldwork: Legacy Media	49
The Ethnographic Field of Legacy Media: Access and Position	52
Fieldwork: Bloggers	54
The Ethnographic Field of Bloggers: Access and Position	56
Digital Anthropology	58
Entanglement of Online and Offline	60
Instagram Landscape	62
Digital Media and Perceived Stress	64
Ethics and Data	67
Chapter IV: Theoretical Perspectives and Analytical Framework	71
Prototypes	73
Prototyping	76

First Prototype: Stay Updated Short, Good and In-depth	77
Second Prototype: The Printed Newspaper	80
Third Prototype: Explore, Share and Create Your City	82
Fourth Prototype: Connect and Change	84
Design Anthropologists	84
The Audience - Families	86
The Audience - Media Houses	86
Taussig and Mimesis	89
Theoretical Ramifications of Photomimesis	90
Chronology of the Instagram Picture	92
Image Production	93
Sharing	95
Co-creating the Digital Persona	97
Epilogue	99
Hyperbabe	100
Colorfeeling	100
MJ	101
Rachel	101
Samwhat	101
Frida Wieda	102
Tanja	102
Lola	102
Chapter V: Introduction to Articles	105
Chapter VI: Article I	107
Chapter VII: Article 2	123
Chapter VIII: Article 3	145
Chapter IX: Conclusion	171
Application of the Media Project	176
Avenues for Future Research	177
Summary:	191
Resumé:	193
Appendix: Visual Storytelling	195

Acknowledgments

The process of making this PhD has been more than a wild rollercoaster, including excitement, laughter, confusion and anxiety, as well as changing perspectives throughout the passage. I owe gratitude to a great number of people who have supported me both academically and personally. It goes without saying that this thesis would not have come together without my interlocutors who have taken the time out of their busy schedules and opened their doors for me to their homes, their companies and networks as well as shared their experiences, feelings and challenges, which have been essential for this work. I am extremely thankful to you and hope that this work represents something interesting for you where you too can learn something.

I owe thanks to my supervisor Hanne Overgaard Mogensen, who followed me on the side through the last steps of my work. I want to give a special thanks to Karen Lisa Salamon who has been a great inspiration through many years. Besides being my initial supervisor I had the pleasure to work with her already during my Master's thesis. I am grateful that you have such a broad thematic understanding of anthropology, including design and social practices in contemporary art. It has been very encouraging to work with someone who can see through my flaws of dyslexia and find strength in an alternative perspective.

I want to thank my co-supervisor and principle Trine Nielsen, who has kept me on the track of bringing the media aspect into this dissertation as well as giving me moral support. It has been much appreciated. I also would like to thank the Danish School of Media and Journalism for giving me the opportunity to become one of the first PhD students at their school as well as choosing an anthropologist for this task. A special thank you goes to the head of the division for research and knowledge, Vibeke Borberg and her substitute Helle Kryger Aggerholm, for both being the inspiring and empowering woman that they are, especially supporting women on their career paths. I would also like to thank my great colleagues at the Danish School for Media and Journalism from all the different professions, from interaction design to creative communication. Merete Nilsson Koch, Ole Rasmussen, Dorte Schiøler, Karsten Vestergaard, Anne Danger Boisen, Stig Møller Hansen, Troels Østergaard, Jøren Ullits Nielsen and Stig Brostrøm - thank you for great hours of teaching together and exchanging professional and personal reflections. A special thanks to Anne Danger Boisen for the graphical support.

I want to extend my thanks to Steffen Jöhncke and Mette Mortensen for taking the time to read parts of my dissertation and help me reflect and rethink my fieldwork through an inspiring discussion at my midway evaluations seminar. I also would like to thank Rasmus Helles from the Department of Media, Cognition and Communication, who has been very supportive in helping me make sense between the field sites of legacy media and blogging. It has been much appreciated.

Without my great colleagues from the department of anthropology, I would not have made it through this process. I am particularly grateful to my office companion Frauke Tom H. Mennes, who has been there with homemade cookies when times were tough and always had an open ear to discuss and read my research. For great and inspiring conversations I would like to thank Mette My Madsen and Loa Kristine Teglgaard Christensen. Thank you also to Signe Lindgård Andersen, Marie Kofod Svensson, Anette Høite Hansen, Anna Maria Frost-Jensen, Maia Ebsen, Maj Hedegaard Heiselberg, Ida Marie Vammen and Camilla Ida Ravnboel. For being equally inspiring colleagues and for reading and commenting on different parts of my PhD drafts I am very thankful to Helene Ilkjær, Lise Røjskjær Pedersen and my two main go-to media anthropologists, Sandra Lori Petersen and Nina Grønlykke Møllerup.

I feel very thankful for colleagues from my exchange at RMIT in Melbourne. Thank you Olivia Guntarik for encouraging me and constructively reading my paper on photomimesis and having inspiring conversations on Benjamin's theories, as well as showing me the arcades of Melbourne. A deep gratitude also goes out to John Postill, for his great sense of listening, being curious about my research topic as well as trying to connect the dots.

I had not been able to finish this PhD had I not been with the support of my friends and family. Thank you for your love, for listening and for just being there: Irina, Josh, Anne Mette, Tim, Anna, Mikka, Caroline and Philipp. You mean the world to me! Finally, I would like to thank my parents and my siblings for your love and faith and for helping me in so many ways.

Chapter I: Introduction

This dissertation as well as its empirical foundations fall in two parts, each based on very different kinds of ethnographic engagement, institutional conditions, and fieldwork. Its analysis, theoretical content and conclusions have grown out of these two fields as well as of the changing inter-disciplinary and cross-institutional conditions under which the PhD process unfolded. Let me elaborate by spending some time in this introduction to briefly sum up the process and characteristics of my ethnographic field sites and how they led to the theoretical choices and analytical experiments of this thesis.

This dissertation began with a commissioned collaboration between the Danish School of Media and Journalism, which also funded my PhD, Danish regional legacy media houses and The Danish Agency for Culture and Palace. More specifically, the Danish School of Media and Journalism employed consultants working with design anthropological methods to help media houses improve their understandings of their audiences. I was part of this team of consultants. In the commissioned project, I was tasked to engage in certain predefined approaches to design anthropology around which the PhD project was organized. I was enlisted as part of a collaborative, ready-set team in an applied project involving several local Danish media houses. The project was commissioned by the legacy media houses because of radical changes in the media landscape and as such also in their livelihoods. The media landscape in Denmark (like elsewhere in the world) is presently undergoing substantial changes due to the growth of digital technology and social media. Social media and the development of Web 2.0 (i.e. the possibility of users interacting on the web) has had great influence on the media market<sup>1</sup> and has generated a larger audience group attractive to advertisers. This movement of advertisers away from legacy media to social media is diagnostic of shifts in both consumption and production generally as well as in the economy of legacy media

---

<sup>1</sup> Blogs emerged in 1994 (Rettberg 2014) and Instagram in 2010 (Serafinelli 2018). Those opportunities can create tension for existing business models of media.