Chapter 1: Welcome to the Feel Good Woods

Many different animals lived in the Feel Good Woods. In many ways the Feel Good Woods were just like all other woods. Just like the woods you already know, these woods were filled with fresh air and many different smells coming from trees, bushes, and flowers. The Feel Good Woods were lovely with many trees and the calming, soothing sounds of the wind, the leaves, and all the animals.

Yet these woods were not quite like all other woods. In the Feel Good Woods the animals felt exceptionally good.

The way you feel when everything is just right, just perfect. It is so nice to feel this way. Don't you think?

One of the animals in the Feel Good Woods did not feel all that good or happy, however. The hare in the Feel Good Woods was not quite as joyous and happy as the other animals seemed to be. A hare, you know, is an animal much like a rabbit. They are larger, faster, and have bigger feet and stronger legs.

It is not like he did not feel good enough most of the time, but he wanted a better life for himself. For the longest time he had believed that if only something changed, he would feel much better. If only he improved his home or found something better to eat, or if he could just hop a little further, he would then become a much happier hare. At least that is what he thought. It did not work out that way, however, and the hare had no idea what to do to start feeling better.

He had felt this way for as long as he could remember, and he was ready for a change. This hare was a very curious fellow. He lived close to a stump. Often he would be sitting on it and take a look around. Right next to the stump he had dug himself a hole in the ground. The hole was shaped like a bowl and fitted his behind just perfectly. He would sit here often and relax, always with his forelegs in front of him ready to take off in case he noticed something strange.

A hare is a curious animal. You can tell by looking at his nose twitching constantly. The hare uses his nose to catch whatever is going on around him. However, this hare was a very special, curious hare. He wanted to find a way to live an even better life here in the Feel Good Woods.

The other animals in the Feel Good Woods named him Wondering Harry. They did so because he always asked a lot of questions. Wondering Harry's ears did not stand straight up like the other hares' ears. His ears would always cover his cheeks, and because of that he did not hear very well.

It is just like when you stick a finger in both your ears. You will not be able to hear very well either, right? Wondering Harry often asked a lot of questions because he did not hear so well. He did so to make sure he had heard everything right and understood what had been said. He wanted to avoid any misunderstandings. Wondering Harry seemed to understand everything much better when he received answers to his questions. The other animals enjoyed talking to Wondering Harry. They liked all his questions and his sincere interest. Human beings are like that, too, right? We like it when people listen to us. True?

Wondering Harry had had enough of not feeling really joyous and happy, so he decided to use his curiosity to find out how to make himself feel better. So off he went to visit the other animals in the Feel Good Woods and talk with them about it. Early one morning while the air, the ground, and the trees were still damp in the Feel Good Woods, Wondering Harry jumped off. He wanted to visit Wise Owl. Wise Owl was a very smart owl. He loved answering questions. Wise Owl almost always had an answer to Wondering Harry's many questions, so Wondering Harry decided to visit Wise Owl first. Wise Owl was an older gentleman. He, too, had been a very curious owl in his younger days, so he had gathered a lot of knowledge.

He would sometimes be very surprised himself at what would come out of his beak. When Wondering Harry jumped off towards the tree where the old owl lived, he passed a big Wisdom Tree. This tree was very old and had grown big and strong. It had been standing in the Feel Good Woods for a very long time.

This was why this tree knew a lot about life. The Wisdom Trees in the Feel Good Woods taught Wondering Harry how to feel better. There are always some wise words scratched in the bark of these trees.

Wondering Harry jumped up close to the tree in order to read the words. These were the words:

Curiosity leads to new knowledge
And you can use your curiosity
Over and over again

But there is one thing you need to remember about ...
